Thank you for your message. I am providing clarification regarding the requirements of Idaho Code § 74-102(4).

The statute requires that a requester state a name and a mailing address. It does not require a verified legal identity, proof of residency, or any form of identity confirmation. It also does not require that the mailing address be used for delivery of records, particularly when the City's own form states that records will be provided electronically.

For purposes of compliance with § 74-102(4), the following information is provided:

- Name: [redacted]
- Email: [redacted] (already used successfully by the City for prior PRRs)
- Alternative Mailing Address: [redacted] Idaho Falls, ID 83405

This satisfies the statutory requirement to "state the requester's name and address."

I also want to note that Idaho's Public Records Act does not allow a public agency to condition access to records based on the identity of the requester or the perceived purpose of the request. Public records are public regardless of who requests them, and the City may not apply § 74-102(4) selectively.

The City has processed over 4,000 public records requests, including a prior request submitted under the same name, [redacted] In that instance, the City communicated with the requester, delivered records electronically, and did not raise any concern regarding the name or address. Selective enforcement of § 74-102(4) is not supported by the statute.

If the City believes additional information is required beyond what § 74-102(4) expressly lists, please provide the specific statutory authority for that requirement.

I respectfully request that the City proceed with processing the request in accordance with Idaho Code § 74-103.

Thank you.
